Gmail sign in gmail account

To merge your Gmail accounts, combine multiple accounts into one, so you can find all your email in the same place and send email from any account at any time. To combine or merge two or more Gmail accounts with links for more information if you need them. If you want to open all your Gmail accounts on the same computer, you don't necessarily need to merge accounts. Instead, switch between multiple Gmail accounts when you're signed in to your other accounts. Follow these general steps to access your Gmail accounts from one account: import emails from your other accounts to your main Gmail account. In the primary account settings, go to the Accounts and Import page. In the Import email and contacts section, choose Email and Contact. Sign in as the other account from which you want to import email, and follow the on-screen instructions to import all messages. Take this step for any account from which you want to import emails. You can check the progress of the merge from the Accounts and Import page. Add each secondary address as a shipping address to the main Gmail account. This way, you send emails from the accounts you added in step 1, but do so from your main account, so you don't have to sign in to those other accounts. This step should have been completed after the end of step 1. If not, follow the instructions in that link to set up the shipping addresses. Set up your main account to always reply to messages with the address the email was sent to. For example, if an email is addressed to your second account address and you want to reply from that account. Go to the Accounts and Import page, and then in the Send Email section, choose reply to the same address where the message was sent. If you don't want to reply from the second account, choose to send email from your primary, default account. After all your email is imported, set up forwarding from the secondary accounts so that new messages always go to your primary account. Now that your accounts' existing emails are in your primary account and each is set up to forward new messages to your main account indefinitely, send you the email as accounts to safely delete the Accounts and Import page. You'll keep messages there if you want to send email under these accounts in the future, but it's no longer necessary for the mail merge because all existing messages (and future messages) are stored in the primary account. Users need a valid username and password to log into their account, which, if can be retrieved using the Need help? link on the sign-in page. On the Google home page, click the Gmail Access link, or simply type the URL in the address bar. The screen must be loaded on to a page that asks for the user's login credentials. Type the user ID and in the right fields, taking into account the fact that passwords are case-sensitive. If you don't remember the password, you need the Help?. A password can be sent to an alternative email, or it can be texted to a mobile phone associated with your account. Best answer: Like most online services, you must be 13 and older to be eligible to create a Gmail account. However, you do set up and manage an account for your child through Family Link, which gives them access to Google services such as Gmail and YouTube. Anyone 13 and older can set up and manage their own Google accounts. The minimum age restriction is in effect because of the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA). This law restricts online services from collecting personal information from users under the age of 13 without their parental consent. Because it is not feasible for services to get parental consent for every underage user who signs in, online services restrict users 13 and below to create an account. For example, if you set up an account for your child younger than another age, and google becomes aware of it, that account will be locked. While 13 years is the standard minimum age for most countries, there are several regions around the world where it is usually higher: Austria: 14+ Bulgaria: 16+ Croatia: 16+ Cyprus: 14+ Czech Republic: 15+ France: 15+ Germany: 16+ Greece: 16+ Hungary: 16+ Ireland: 16+ Italy: 14+ Lithuania: 14+ Luxembourg: 16+ Netherlands: 16+ Poland: 16+ Portugal: 16+ Romania: 16+ San Marino: 16+ Slovakia: 16+ Slovenia: 16+ Spain: 14+ South Korea: 14+ Vietnam: 15+ Aruba: 16+ Caribbean Netherlands: 16+ Curaçao: 16+ Sint Maarten: 16+ Peru: 14+ Venezuela: 14+ Family Link is the only way to create a Google account for someone under the age of 13 using Family Link. The feature allows parents to set up and manage a Google Account for their children, with the ability to set activity controls and content restrictions. For Gmail accounts used by children under the age of 13, there are a few differences. Google doesn't display ads in Gmail or read the content of the targeted ad emails. Automatic forwarding and Offline Gmail are also not available to underage users. Emails that Google identifies as spam are not delivered to the inbox or even in the spam folder. If you want to set up your child with Gmail, it's best to use Family Link right now. The robust set of controls offered makes it extremely easy to configure an account for your children and set up protections in the form of SafeSearch, downloads and purchases, and screen time limits. We have all the details on how to get it done, whether you're looking for a new account or you just want to switch to another email service. It's also easy, and you do it without completely getting rid of your Google account. There are a few things worth mentioning when you delete a Gmail account. First, although deleting your Gmail account will definitely delete all emails on it, Google can't immediately delete all those emails. If you decide to keep your Gmail account open later, you may be able to get it back. Second, in case you're worried about security, that once you've deleted your account, Google won't let anyone else use that account. So you don't have to worry about someone else using that Gmail address. And finally, before you get started and delete your Gmail account, you'll need to download all the information in your email account. Otherwise, once that data is lost, it's lost forever. Don't worry: We've covered you there too: this is how you download your Gmail data and store it on your computer. Deleting your Gmail account depends on the device you're using, so we've made sure you give instructions for both Android and iOS devices. On a computer Step one: go to the Google Account Manager page. You can jump through this link or by opening Gmail, clicking the grid next to your user icon, and clicking the Account option on the pop-up menu.
